Friday 8th August sees the England Women's Cricket team playing their first match at the prestigious home of Cricket, Lord's in Marylebone. Fresh from the team's victories in the West Indies, New Zealand and Ashes rivals Australia, the England Women's Cricket Team return to Lord's on 8th August to take on South Africa.

Following the match there will be a photo opportunity with the team where they will be sporting their official team uniform designed by highly acclaimed Irish designer Paul Costelloe who is renowned for his structured yet feminine formal wear.

Paul Costelloe designed both the team's two-piece formal suiting for interviews as well as a casual travelling outfit. He says of his designs: "This is certainly the year for women in sport; it has been an honour and a privilege to be associated with a team at the top of their game and to create the outfits for these amazing sportswomen."

England women's captain Charlotte Edwards commented: "It's fantastic to be wearing Paul Costelloe. The whole look gives us an identity as a team and both outfits are of really high quality. It's great to be associated with such a high-quality product."
